“Warm Water: The Last Act of Compassion” is a poignant anthology of stories offering comfort and closure to terminally ill patients and their loved ones.

Author Carl “Pepper” Cappuccio is an experienced hospice nurse and compassionate end-of-life guide who cares for his patients through the dying process and shortly after their death.

When that transition occurs, Pepper gently bathes the deceased in warm water as a final compassionate gesture of dignity and respect. He also gives emotional support to family members to help ensure there is a peaceful transition for all involved.

In each heart-rending tale, Pepper takes readers on a journey that allows them to intimately experience what he is thinking and feeling in his role as a trusted caretaker. His descriptions are woven together using the sights, sounds, smells, surroundings, and feelings present during the final days and hours of life, and shortly after a patient has passed.

As a benevolent caretaker, Pepper's moving collection of personal accounts supports patients and the bereaved in navigating their experience of grief and loss, and finding acceptance and grace. The book also provides them with beneficial information and soothing reassurances.

Published by Christian Faith Publishing, “Warm Water: The Last Act of Compassion” will leave a definitive emotional impact on readers. It can be purchased at traditional brick-and-mortar bookstores, or online through itunes.com, amazon.com, and barnesandnoble.com. A book synopsis can be viewed on youtube.com.
